ADVENTURE BACKED-UP BY SCIENCE

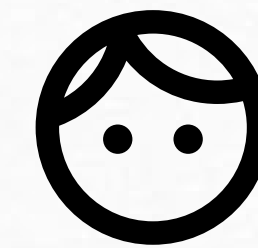

Kosmix is a balanced mix of exploration, adventure and fun. The protagonist is Kit, a wacky little robot who sets out to explore the universe. But because he doesn't know much about it himself, he gets into trouble with planets, objects and physical phenomena. On his journey, he meets his new best friend, Mr. Battery. Because the best experiences are the ones you have someone to share with.

Through the Kosmix series, kids learn about our solar system, the galaxy, and physical phenomena on short, funny adventures. Thanks to expert collaboration with the European Space Agency, all information is scientifically based. At the same time, the entertaining stories make them easily digestible for the target audience.

What the episodes are about

Kit begins his adventure on planet Earth, where he must first overcome gravity and equip himself with an engine for interplanetary flight. Gradually, he learns about our solar system and ventures beyond its borders. Through asteroid belts, black holes and nebulae, he and his friend, Mr. Battery, reach the very edge of the galaxy.

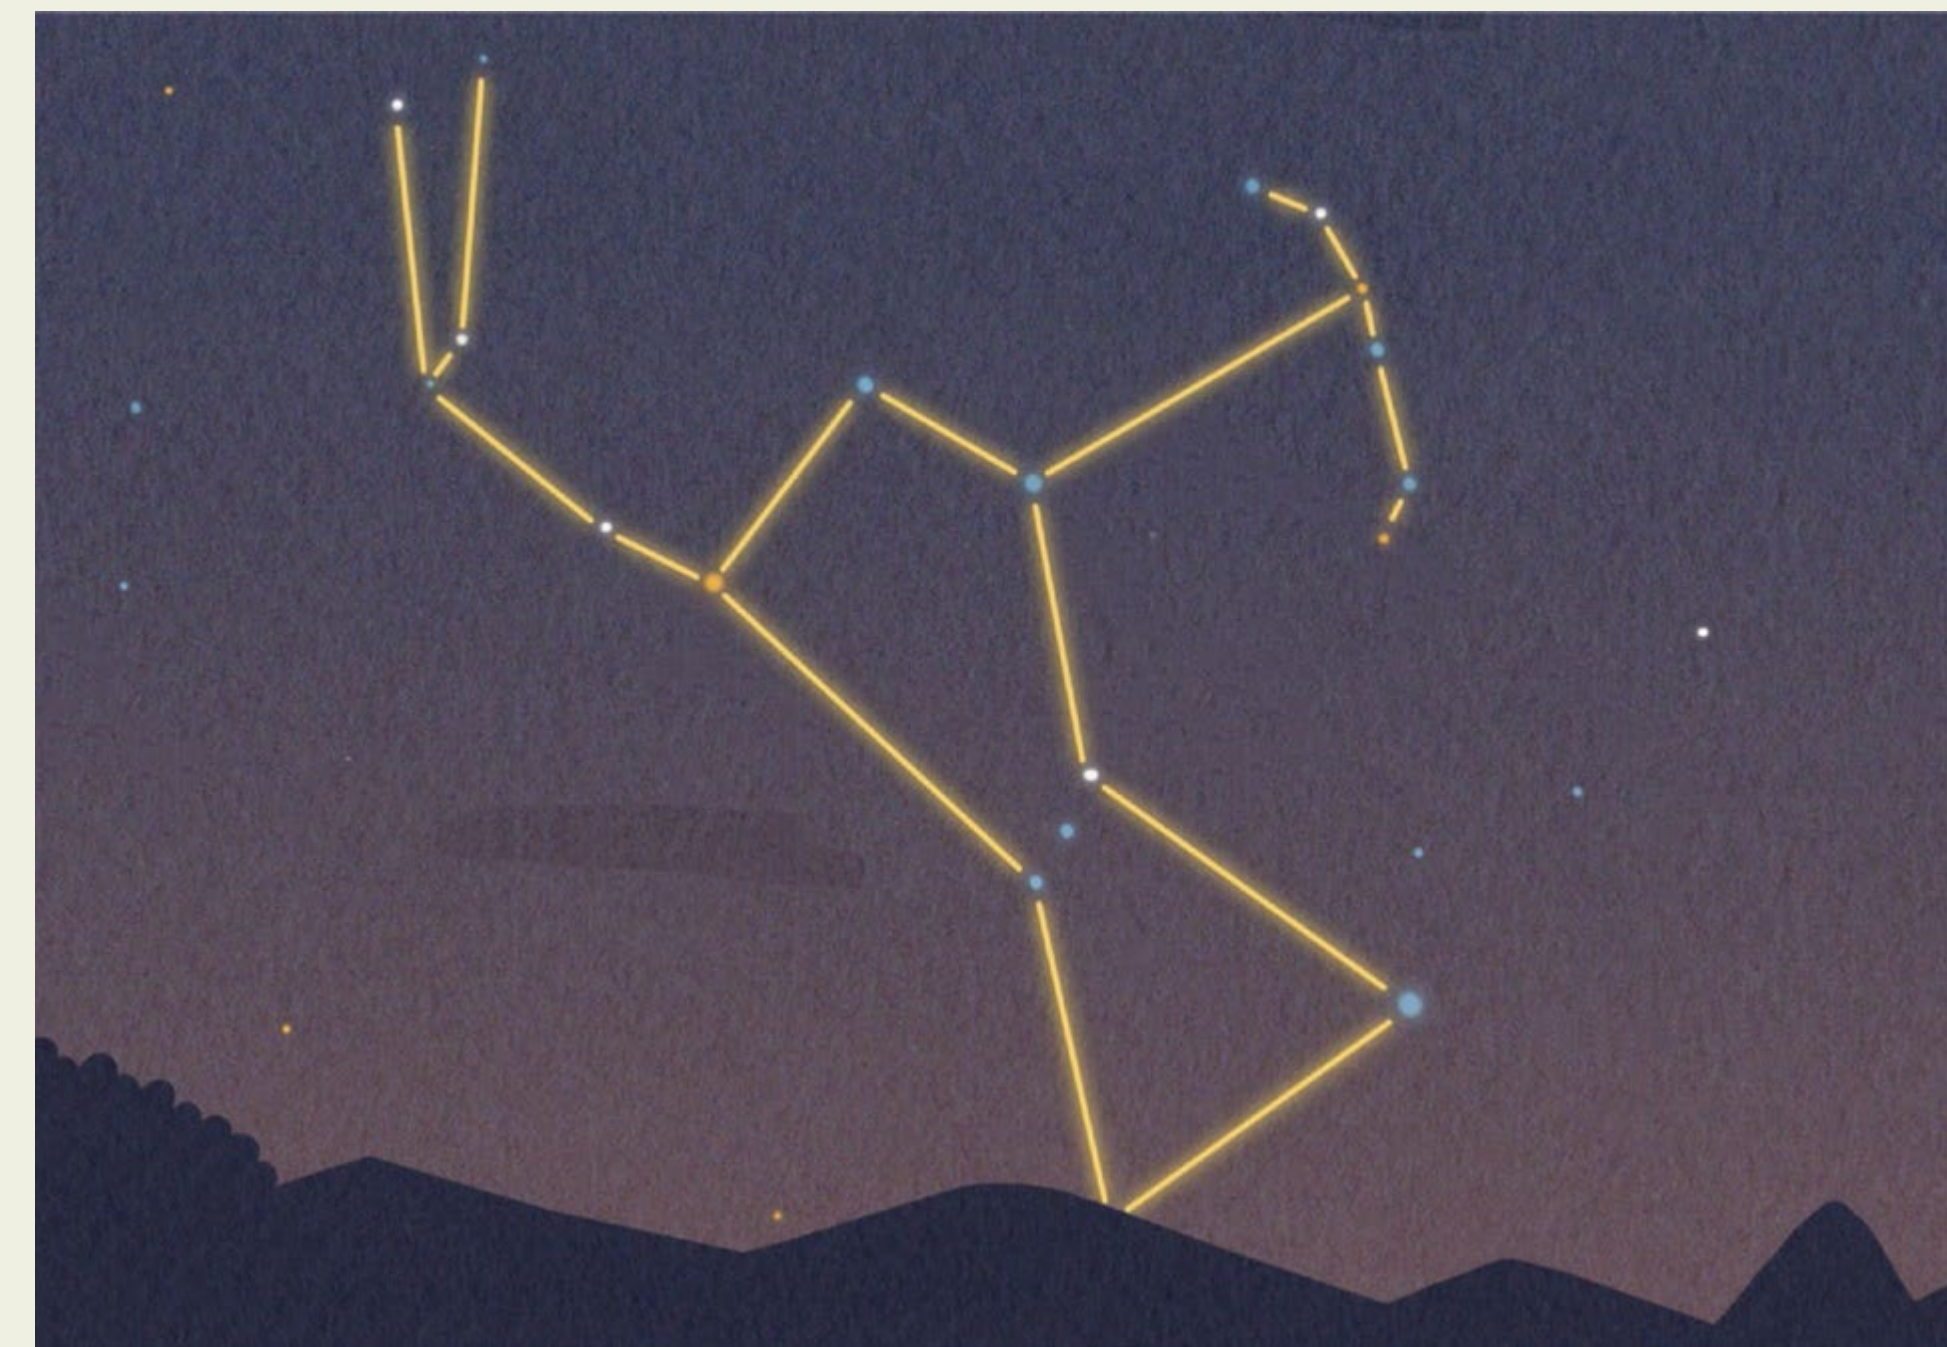

How do you straighten out scattered Saturn rings? Did Mr. Battery get eaten by a budding star? Where did the mysterious planet go? Can aliens be found on exoplanets?

These are just a few examples of all the adventures the two best friends will have on their travels.

There are about 3 scientific facts in each episode, which form the basis of an enjoyable plot. All facts are scientifically verified by the scientific guarantor - the European Space Agency - ESERO

And their parents love it too!

We like to show our children films and series that don't lose the sparkle in their eyes. Our son laughed while watching and asked questions afterwards about what and how the universe works. The series is just realistic enough (it works space physics and doesn't commit simplifications that would lead to confusion in kids' heads). But it's also just right in a childlike and funny way - the celestial bodies in it are alive and have their own characters and moods. It all comes together to create the kind of cosmic social reality that ended up amusing even us adults.
